

Scenario

Over the course of a few days, a mentor notices that one student frequently seeks out another student during free time and transitions between activities. The student often compliments them, saying things like, “You look really good today” or “You should hang out with me later.”

The second student appears uncomfortable at times and has declined invitations to hang out, saying they are busy or want to spend time with others. Despite this, the first student continues to approach them, sits next to them whenever possible, and once lightly touches their arm while talking.

Another student mentions to the mentor that “it’s kind of awkward” and that the second student has been trying to avoid the situation but doesn’t want to make it a big deal.

The mentor is unsure whether this is normal social behavior or something that needs to be addressed.

- Is there any concern here? Why or why not?
- Is this a violation of the code of conduct? Why or why not?
- What is your move as a leader?