

Let's see it in Action!

The Scenario: It is 10:00 PM on Sunday night. You are running the final staff meeting before Day 1. The team is running on fumes after a long weekend of training and student move-ins, and you have a dense, highly administrative agenda to deliver.

The Conflict: As you walk through the logistical details—like meeting times for breakfast, safety rules regarding the boundary walk, and specific classroom supplies (like stethoscopes and circuits kits)—you notice Mentors are starting to glaze over, look at their phones, or blindly nod along just to get out of the room.

As leadership, what steps may have been missed and how do we fix this issue going forward?
